

Our analysis clearly demonstrates that the current FCC and ICNIRP limits for cell phones and wireless networks are structurally incapable of protecting human health. We urgently need governments to step up, abandon these obsolete guidelines, and conduct rigorous risk assessments using modern toxicological data.

The science is there; now we need the policy to catch up so we can protect public and occupational health.

— Ronald Melnick, PhD

*Former Senior Toxicologist, National Toxicology Program (NTP),
National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences
Senior Science Advisor, Past Chair, ICBE-EMF*