Brief Comment

The FCC's repeated refusal to consider biological effects from exposure to all types of wireless radiation shows a clear and dangerous intention to disregard the emerging science which must inform its decisions regarding public health.The agency's reliance on organizations of physicists and engineers for advice on human exposures has resulted in a sole focus on "thermal" effects, despite thousands of published, peer-reviewed studies showing biological harm, even at non-thermal levels, for various frequency ranges.The FCC's own admission that it is unaware of any other types of effects demonstrates a failure to actively investigate the issue by proactively engaging with the scientific community studying the short and long-term biological impacts of exposure to humans and possible interference with systems of the natural world. Failure to seek out and consider the latest science makes decisions of the FCC suspect. I can’t help but ask: Why would you do such things? Is someone paying you to violate the lives and rights of Americans? Who is profiting from this dangerous and reckless experiment? Why isn’t our government, which poses to protect and support Americans, actually doing what it has promised? And why is the federal government not acting within its own laws as set forth in the Constitution?Moreover, the complex comment process used by the FCC virtually ensures that most commenters will be those who follow the activities of the agency closely and have a financial interest in the agency's decisions.

This is a complete outrage! I personally am physically debilitated from electromagnetic radiation, experiencing headaches, nausea, dizziness, and experiencing headaches, nausea, dizziness, and fatigue. I cannot function normally when in the field of electromagnetic devices. My illness is so intense that my family and I are planning to move away from a neighboring cell phone tower—uprooting our family and our farm at a massive financial and emotional loss—because of the FCC's refusal to allow local governments to consider the health effects of radiation when placing cell phone towers. I have great fear and concern for myself and my children because we have no way to escape these invasive and violating actions, perpetrated by the very government that is supposedly in place to protect my rights and my life as a law-abiding citizen of America. It is entirely clear, the FCC's actions violate Americans' rights, damage America's health, and destroy American communities.
