RE: Linda M. Hinson
DOB: 08.01.1959

To Whom it May Concern:

Ms. Hinson is a 62 year-old, widowed, white female who was seen by me 10.15.21.

Ms. Hinson has been on disability since 2006 for chronic neck and back pain and migraine headaches. She also has symptoms of depression, anxiety, sleep problems/insomnia, difficulty concentrating, restlessness/tension, irritability, exhaustion, fatigue, difficulty finding words(anomia), forgetfulness/memory problems, dizziness, noise sensitivity, tinnitus, nervous bladder/urinary frequency, heart palpitations, blood pressure problems, muscle tension, joint pain. These are all symptoms of Wireless Radiation Sensitivity as documented by the Austrian Medical Association in 2012 and 2016

In my opinion, placing a mobile phone tower close to her home will most likely make all of these symptoms much, much worse, especially her chronic neck and back pain and her migraines. Her life would be torture in her family home, and then she would die. Radiation effects are cumulative, and she would become more and more sensitive with intensifying symptoms. Even if her family could afford to shield her home from the wireless radiation from the tower and mitigate the dirty electricity generated by mobile phone towers, she would become a prisoner in her ancestral home. She would not be able to go outside to walk in the woods, put her feet in the grass and bask in the sunshine daily, all of which would help her symptoms.

The Americans with Disabilities Act requires state and local governments to make accommodations for a disabled person. The Stanly County Commissioners did that in not approving the placement of a mobile tower near Ms. Hinson's home. Her home needs to be a safe place for her to live in peace with access to her land without constraints substantially limiting her major life activities, making her disabilities worse and ultimately causing premature death.

The Americans with Disabilities Act also states that commercial entities, like Verizon, providing public accommodations, must make accommodations for disabled persons in a similar manner as that of state and local governments. Verizon building a mobile phone tower near Ms. Hinson's home is the equivalent of assaulting her in her own home and leaving her for dead. Ms. Hinson's life and disabilities should be respected and accommodated.

Sincerely,

Natalie Sadler, MD
