

My name is Kathryn Stauffer.

Please take a moment to read and then consider what I am telling you about. It is about our brand new "Human Rights Issue."

In this country we are suppose to have Liberty and Freedoms, I would assume this would include all the people. Even those of us called "Sensitives." Those with suffer from Electro Hypersensitivity or EHS, aka Microwave Injury.

Are we expendable because we are a minority and not part of "progress?" What I really am is "the canary in the mine," and so are many, many other people who are suffering.

Right now our rights have been stolen from us by the wireless industries and those who support wireless. How would you feel, if you could feel wireless technology? For us it's painful. We can not go anywhere without feeling this pain and discomfort. There is no where for any of us to go that is completely safe any longer. We are running out of options. Does anyone even care? Where is the humanity?

I talk to people every week who are out in the Electro Smog, who are suffering. They are living in shielded closets, rooms, and some in their cars, moving about to locations they can handle. Many of their families, friends, and community shun them as crazy. It's awful! They are looking for advice from me! Looking for hope.

I was run out of my home in Illinois in 2015 from ever encroaching electro smog. What finally pushed me over the edge was the Comcast Xfinity Wifi Hotspots that were placed all over our small town. For 10 months I lived in a safer, temporary location out in the country while I figured out what I was going to do. Finally in 2016, I made my way, (a very difficult task) to Green Bank, West Virginia. Leaving a 30 year life in Illinois, leaving everyone, and everything, and spending a lot of money to make it happen. This was not a move I wanted to make at almost 60 years old.

Here in Green Bank, everyone with EHS has an incredible story to tell.

Right now this is the safest place on earth. Although much safer here (less RFR overall), it's far from perfect, and safety is diminishing. Wifi has made it in, even though it is prohibited. It affects all of us with EHS and the Green Bank Telescope as well. That telescope does very important work and brings in 30 million dollars annually to this county and really does deserve more respect than it is getting by the local public. Wifi is in every business and most every home in Green Bank, in defiance to the law that is not upheld.

Now, we with EHS face the threat of Global Wifi and 5G, on a people who can not handle what is already in place. It is a sad day when human beings must place all their hopes on a telescope for a place to be in the world that gives them less pain.

The argument should not be about whether these EMF's hurt the telescopes ability to function, (which is also important), but whether it is harming human beings ability to function.

Many have, and are making their way here. Some show up in their cars, broke and desperate. Where are our Public Servants? Why are we being over looked?

I love technology, but it needs to be safe for all. I never would have imagined my life would have taken such a turn, nor can the others I have met who are dealing with this.

The emotional, mental, physical, and financial toll is outrageous.

Why are we not making technology safe for all life?

What the EHS Community needs right now are true "Safe Zones" created. Opt out communities, if the rest of society insists on being radiated. The science is in, this stuff isn't good for anyone whether a person feels it or not. We need some one in politics, with a voice to take a stand. We need help! We need to be heard! We are Americans too! This earth is our home too!

A thought might be to get local government to focus on creating this area, (maybe Green Bank, WV or Pocahontas County, WV), as the first "Safest Place On Earth." A campaign to make it a true "Safe Zone." It could attract businesses that want to build green/safe homes and communities. It would be a good selling point to many, many people who do not want / or can not live with this ever encroaching toxic technology. We demand a choice! This is our divine right as a human being on this planet.

Thank you for listening.

Sincerely,

Kathryn Stauffer
